WASHINGTON, June 2.—Other wedding days have been at the White House—night in all but never before to-day has the highest dignity in the land bowed his head within its historic walls to receive the blessing of the church on his union in the holy bonds of matrimony. From the very dawn of the wedding day the city seemed alive to the approaching event. Little knots of idlers strolled over the sidewalks in front of the hotels, waiting matrons gazed at the passing crowds, and the streets were filled with the happy throngs of the wedding party. The guests, dressed in the latest fashion, were seen in the streets, and the city was filled with the happy throngs of the wedding party. At 6:30 the wedding guests began to arrive at the White House, their carriages drawn up in front of the building. The first arrival was Secretary Lamont, who was accompanied by his wife and daughter. They were followed by the other guests, who arrived in great numbers. The ceremony was held in the East Room, which was decorated with flowers and bunting. The bride, Miss Cleveland, was attended by her bridesmaids, and the groom, Mr. Cleveland, was attended by his best man. The ceremony was performed by the Chief Magistrate, who read the vows and pronounced them man and wife.

Revival of the Mining Industry.

One of the most interesting features connected with the present revival of business on the Pacific Coast, is the renewed development of our mining interests. All over Nevada and in many parts of California, capital is being invested in mining enterprises to an extent not known before for at least ten years, and the work in this line that is either being done or projected for the near future is something marvelous. Panamint, where Senator Jones sunk his hundreds of thousands, after a sleep of a dozen years, is again a busy scene of life and effort. The old workings have been reopened, new mills are being constructed, and with the inventions and progress of science in the last few years in chemistry and metallurgy, it is altogether probable that Panamint rock will now pay, and that that camp may yet realize the golden visions of its discoverers. A gentleman just in from the Ogilby District in San Diego county gives a very encouraging account of the developments in that region, and says that the wealthy Boston men who own the principal mine there will shortly erect an 80-stamp mill of the most approved character at Yuma, the coming winter. They have already gone East to purchase the plant for it. Many other instances of similar developments might be noted, which are all decidedly cheering to old Californians, at least. When mining is active, times are always good in California. The mining camps provide the best of markets for all kinds of produce, and employment for surplus laborers at high wages, while the output of gold and silver furnishes a plethora of circulating medium to entice all kinds of businesses. We all remember the magical effect the Comstock lode exercised on this coast. The three hundred and sixty millions of dollars taken out of the Comstock, first and last, may be said to have almost built San Francisco and developed the coast. The Palace Hotel, the Nevada Bank, the Baldwin Hotel, and hundreds of other notable structures there, as well as the fortunes of their owners, are all due to the Comstock. If it had not been for that find of silver, the building of the transcontinental railroad would probably have been delayed for years. The Comstock was the first silver mine discovered on the coast. It is unreasonable to suppose that the very richest and most extensive mine was discovered first of all. It is only reasonable to conjecture that there are others yet undeveloped, or only covered that will equal or surpass it. And it is more than likely that the present revival of the mining business will result in just such a discovery and development. Situated as Los Angeles is, our city cannot but feel the first effects of such a discovery, benefit and reap the greatest possible benefit therefrom.

The Fisheries Dispute.

The Canadian fisheries question will probably be a dead matter to the United States, and will be dealt with Canada through Great Britain, instead of directly, which complicates the situation. In the meantime, while the proverbial slowness of diplomacy delays a settlement, the Canadians will most likely continue to seize American vessels, thus augmenting the difficulty still more. Our dispatches yesterday morning gave an account of the seizure of another American vessel the day before by the Canadians. If the Canadian Dominion were an independent nation, the case would be entirely different. As it is, the condition of affairs is disagreeably complicated. There is little prospect of any serious dispute over the question with the British government, but as the subject is now being considered by the present government of the United States and Great Britain, it would certainly be as well for the Canadian authorities to wait the capture of American vessels until it is determined whether or not the two countries can arrive at a definitive agreement on the subject, or not. Americans are most likely to get into trouble with any nation. Especially do we want to avoid any conflict with our neighbors across the border. The Republican party, by its twenty-five years of power, has left us without a navy or any protection, and our great sea-port cities. And it would take several years to create an adequate navy. But, still, the American heart is firm. The administration is in Democratic hands, and Democrats have ever upheld the honor of the Republic. Our Canadian neighbors would do well to act with a little more circumspection, when it is evident, too, that England, herself, is intensely anxious to maintain the present friendly relations with the United States. The Americans, it is true, are at a great disadvantage on account of lack of a navy, but nevertheless, they could easily put a half a million soldiers in the field, who would make it very uncomfortable for any neighboring country that would render it necessary for such a display of military or any protection.

But no matter what may result from the present contention, the Democratic administration will be found both enough and wise enough to deal with it in a way that will do credit to the American name.

Now that Cleveland is safely married, it is to be hoped that all the noddies who have made themselves so disgusting about his wedding, will subside, in the interest of common decency. We are glad to hear that Mr. Cleveland showed the good taste to make this decidedly personal affair as private as possible under the circumstances.

NEW YORK, June 2.—Government bonds held steady.

Opening of the market was quiet, and the closing figures of last night, and further declines followed, but were soon checked. The market then became quiet and rallied small fractions.

This was followed in its turn by another sharp decline, and another fractional rally, followed by a dull market, but late in the afternoon there was a noticeable increase in the business done and a strong undertone, and quotations advanced slowly but steadily until the close, which was at or near the best prices of the day.
